completely discouraged because of his lack of success and recognition. In 1973 he wrote in his memoirs: "1914. Now that the occasion presents itself, to begin business, I seize the opportunity. Of course, I begin to leave behind my eternal poverty. There is also in my strong interior, the desire to make a family. But, my only real motive, is that painting is dead for me. I want to find a place in society."

Souvenirs of the Heart, 2 channel, color, 29 minutes, 1986.

"King: I want to get to know other peoples memories.
Major Dom: What do you expect of those memories?
King: How can I get acquainted with other people's lives if I cannot feel the tremors of their existence?
Major Dom: But you yourself have lived a stirring life.
King: I know who I am and how I came to be who I am, and that frightens me. I can no longer believe in it.
Major Dom: What kind of memories are you interested in?
King: I am intrigued by moments in people's lives when they make decisions. For instance: That's how it should be, or 'never again.' What did they do at such a moment, or what motivated them to do what they did? They must have preserved an image of it. I want to get to know those images."

Koen Theyes and Frank Theyes
Song of My Country (Part I, Rheingold), color, 90 minutes, 1986.

A grotesque interpretation of the "Ring des Nibelungen" and "Parsifal" by Richard Wagner, this Opera for television refers to the history of music video and especially the adventure of the performing body. As in music videos, the body is treated (read destroyed) much like the early silent films of Méliès and Serret. Does this destroyed body still have a voice, a morality?

Nil by Mouth, color, 17 minutes, 1983.

A moving performance originally done with a live, simultaneous, stereo broadcast of Beethoven's Symphony Number 9 in D.

Accidents in the Home

Number 4, Epilogue, color, 2 minutes, 1983.
Number 17, Gasfires, color, 2.5 minutes, 1984.
Number 8, Holiday Insurance, color, 4.5 minutes, 1985.
Number 9, Indoor Games, color, 8 minutes, 1986.

"Accidents in the Home is composed of an expansive and definitive series of episodes or excursions into the vagaries of domestic life.

One's immediate domestic environment provides a varied source of notions or spaces to be examined seriously or otherwise. There is nothing too commonplace or too day-to-day that does not bear inspection or visual celebration. Will inanimate objects do as they are told? The notion of accidents has a bearing upon the idea of inanimate objects in motion; accidents are what happens when we lose control. These accidents are usually slight, rarely fatal, and occasionally interfered.

"I enjoy those moments of demolition, the endless hours of planning, days of rehearsals. The aim, as ever, is to capture those moments at the moment of control."

Absolute Art, 2 channel, color/black & white, 28.5 minutes, 1985.

Absolute Art is inspired by the life of Jan F. Van Deene, the Dutch painter who went to Paris in 1912. Once there, he began, along with his friend and lover Jacob Bendien, to paint totally abstract works. For this reason, both painters must be included among the first abstract artists. They named their art 'Absolute Art.' Shortly thereafter, in 1914, Jan F. Van Deene gave up painting altogether.
When Alberich succeeds in turning the 'noise picture' of television into more or less real images, the gods feel spied upon and threatened. In exchange for one of his wives, Wotan has two giants build a fortress in which he will take refuge. Later he steals Alberich's statue in order to trade it for the return of his wife. The giants are implicated in the deal, and pitted against one another in a struggle that ends in death for one of them.

ALAIN BOURGES
Lumière et circonstances. 8 episodes, 9 minutes each, color, 1986.

Alain Bourges approaches desire through a European location (or site) by superimposing two systems, one made in 16mm, and the other in video, the script is read by one actor. It is the difference between film and video that "fictionalizes" itself. Isolated in one or the other the characters are sought in an eternal tension, never able to unite. In order to come together, words are only what are left for them, but burning with fantasy.
