SoHo, Stealthy Bastion for Alternative Works

SoHo was once the hub of the New York art world; now it's a site for a Vital zone: some of the city's oldest alternative spaces are there, amid new ones, like Third Street. Several of these spaces, with blocks of brick and glass, are on the side of the Bowery that faces the East River. In the past, these were primarily offices and studios. Today, they are galleries, theaters, and even restaurants.}

Rolland Cotter

CRITIC'S NOTEBOOK

March 24, 1985

In SoHo, there is a sense of excitement and anticipation in the air. The galleries are open, and people are out and about, exploring the neighborhood. The art on display is diverse, ranging from abstract to representational. A walk through the streets will take you past many of the galleries, each with its own unique style and offerings. You can find everything from paintings to sculptures, and everything in between. Whether you're an art lover or just passing through, a visit to SoHo is a must.